

ARMY HERO EXPLAINS DECISION

By AL CHANG

TUO MORONG, South Viet Nam (AP) — Capt. Bill Carpenter said today he called in air and artillery strikes on Communist troops overrunning his position because "this was the most effective way I could see to kill them."

"The Air Force made the initial run with napalm and cannon fire," he said. "We lost some of our people then."

The decision saved the ground for his company on Thursday and may win him the Medal of Honor. His company is Company C of the 502nd Battalion of the "Screaming Eagles" 101st Airborne Division.

FORMER GRID STAR

Carpenter, 28, who won fame as the "Lonesome End" of the 1959 West Point football team, marched the remains of his company out of the battle area today.

With him was Capt. Ron Brown, Chattanooga, Tenn., who led his company to Carpenter's aid. Brown, who celebrated his 26th birthday today, is to be recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross, the second highest U.S. award.

Carpenter's company ran into dug-in North Vietnamese regulars as he led his men into a wooded area in the jungle highlands. The U.S. troops were taking part in a big sweep called Operation Hawthorne.

Seated at a helicopter landing zone where wounded were coming through, the bearded, dirty, captain told his story.

TELLS OF BATTLE

"We could hear them talking and moving around as we moved up the hill," he said. "They didn't seem to know we were in the area. Our first platoon hit them first and began cutting them down with machine-gun fire."

The fight alerted other Communist units.

"More and more of them then started coming in on us. They pinned us down. Then they started to get right in with us — right among us."

"I called in artillery and air strikes right on top of us. This was the most effective way I could see to kill them."

"Did I mark my position with a smoke grenade?"

"I don't know. I'm not sure. But I had my radio and I adjusted the strikes from the earlier passes. After those first strikes we had air with us all the time. It saved our rear ends. They knew exactly where we were.

CALL IN ARTILLERY

"We called in artillery right on top of us, too. We kept that up almost until Able Company reached us about 2300 (11 p.m.) that (Thursday) night."

Able Company was led by Brown. It had to fight its way through Communist firefights four times to reach Carpenter. They killed 14 of the enemy.

When Brown came up he took command of the hill — because he had more men than Carpenter.

"But we worked together," Brown said. "Everything we did we did together. There wasn't any disagreement up there."

"It was a hell of a thing," Brown added with relief.

"Today when we came out I looked back and realized how vulnerable we had been up there," he added.

"Getting back to this landing zone is birthday present enough for me," said Brown.

MAY GET TOP MEDAL

Both units were pulled out of the action for a rest.

A recommendation for a Medal of Honor for Carpenter was made by Lt. Col. Henry Emerson, commanding officer of Carpenter's battalion. He also recommended a Distinguished Service Cross for Brown.

In Washington, the White House took note of Carpenter's action.

Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers was asked about President Johnson's reaction to Carpenter's feat and said, "I think he finds it an inspiring chapter in the Viet Nam story."

Carpenter, whose wife and mother live in Monroe, N.Y., was called the "lone end" because he never entered the West Point team's huddles. A quarterback's signal told him which play was being called.

Benton township Democrat Floyd J. Mattheussen announced Friday he has filed for re-election as 44th district legislator.

Mattheussen, 36, said he was eager to face the challenge of a second term and cited what he called significant accomplishments since taking office.

Mattheussen became the first Democratic legislator to be elected from Berrien county since 1936 when he defeated incumbent Republican Gail Handy in 1964. He faces a contest in November against Lionel J. Stacey, Fairplain junior high school principal, a Republican candidate.

No intra-party opposition has been announced against either

Berrien Springs Traffic Victim

BERRIEN SPRINGS — Gary Schroeder, 11, of 4016 St. Joseph avenue, became Berrien county's 16th traffic fatality of the year when he was struck and killed by an auto at 11:25 a.m. yesterday near his home on US 31-33, Niles state police reported.

Troopers said that Gary's brother, Gail, 14, told them he was walking with Gary to a fruit stand when Gary suddenly bolted onto the highway without looking for cars. He was struck by a car driven by Jan Nielsen, 18, Garland

Gary had just completed the fifth grade at the Berrien Springs elementary school. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Schroeder, his brother, Gail, at home, and a maternal grandmother, Mrs. Violet Ruth Konopinski of South Bend. Schroeder is a plant guard at Superior Steel in Benton Harbor.

Test Pilot Dies For Publicity

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. George H. Mahon, D-Tex., says he was "shocked and dismayed" when he learned a fatal midair crash of a multimillion-dollar XB70 experimental plane and an F104 Wednesday came during a "publicity flight" for General Electric Co. Mahon said Friday Undersecretary of the Air Force Norman S. Paul and other officials confirmed the XB70, the F104 and three other aircraft were flying a tight pattern so GE could take films. The firm manufactured the engines of all five planes.

Famed test pilot Joseph A. Walker and Air Force Maj. Carl S. Cross were killed in the crash. Cross was piloting the

Seen Threat To Free Enterprise

Clark's President Schirmer Talks To LMC Graduates

"The twisted economics being spoon-fed to American students from grade school through graduate school could be the seed of destruction for the free enterprise system," a leading industrialist warned at the Lake Michigan college commencement Friday.

Walter E. Schirmer, president of Clark Equipment company, was critical of impressions obtained by students from economics classes as he addressed the graduation at St. Joseph high school auditorium.

"Our young people have long been taught economic myths and unproved theories. We can no longer afford the confusion and uncertainty generated by such economic mythology."

"Now is a time for hard economic facts—for teachings that properly position business and government and labor in our modern economic structure. And the leadership," he emphasized, "must come from educators."

CITES SINCERITY Schirmer, a trustee of Illinois Institute of Technology, said he did not intend his remarks as a blanket indictment of educators. Nor was he trying to suggest that teachers have tried deliberately to undermine the position of business.

"Their intentions have been honorable and their convictions sincere. Unfortunately, they have just as often been wrong—in emphasis and interpretation if not in fact."

Schirmer noted that "business is, after all, the only generator of wealth in any society. . . . Public service doesn't create wealth. Nor does education. Nor, in any real sense, does government."

"We can't have the good things in life without a favorable business atmosphere and the sound economy that accrues from that. We can't have government aid programs and social reforms unless business pays a large share of the cost and creates the wealth with which individuals pay the balance."

USING REASON He urged the 140 graduates to "take with a grain of salt much of the criticism you may hear about business," declaring there are two sides to the coin.

Schirmer conceded that business has done a poor job of expressing its true role in the modern economy. He said $15 billion a year is spent on advertising and public relations but the results do not clear up

Sorry He's Leaving Town

Not being a Methodist, we can only assume the church's Michigan conference knows best what it should do in the matter of rotating its ministers, but we join with the local parishioners in wishing the Rev. Keith L. Hayes could stay on at the St. Joseph church.

The hierarchy announced two days ago that he will be transferred to the Mason pastorate in the near future.

The Rev. Hayes came here eight years ago after tours of duty with four other Michigan parishes since his ordination in 1940.

He has been a welcome figure in all manner of public events and activities.

An excellent speaker for the simple reason that he expresses something well worth listening to, the Rev. Hayes has been justifiably sought after by many groups, be it as toastmaster, the principal speaker or the deliverer of the benediction.

One such talk that still sticks in our mind was given almost four years ago to the day that the announcement of his transfer was released.

The occasion was a commencement address to the eighth grade youngsters leaving their country schoolhouses for the last time. Our youngest was one of those being passed on into the high school level.

We can't remember his exact wording, but his theme that the way to meet life is to get on the ball and stay on it was the best message for the adolescent mind we've ever heard; and come to think of it, his remarks could be taken to heart better than they are by us adults.

Speaking of life, we suppose it's part of living to see good men depart from our midst.

It's just that in Mr. Hayes' case, we don't like his transfer orders any more than do his disappointed parishioners.

The Neglected Course

The most maligned of the social sciences is economics. Yet the fact is that economics is not concerned with far out theories but with things of first importance in our daily lives. Economic principles determine the size of a family's income, the kind of a house they live in, the make of car they drive, the number of children they have and the kind of life those children can look forward to living.

In the United States, our national government takes an ever greater part in influencing in one way or another the economic life of the nation. In a simpler time when government was not such a factor in the workings of the country, the economic literacy of the individual citizen was not so critical.

Today the picture is far different, and the importance of economic understanding on the part of the individual citizen cannot be overemphasized.

Economics is not a "dismal science". Quite the opposite. It is not only close to our lives in the material sense, but the degree of understanding of its principles which the average citizen has will determine the shape of our political system and the future of individual freedom.

In a current issue of Petroleum Today, Dr. Lewis Webster Jones discusses the situation. He observes that: "The citizen cannot express his views intelligently, as a voter or as a participant in local government, unless he understands such economic problems as the impact of automation, government deficits, medical care for the aged, and the important issues affecting economic growth and stability. All too few Americans have the basic economic training necessary for such an understanding."

There has been considerable publicity given to the fact that economic training in our schools has been disastrously below standard. Although there is a long way to go, the picture is gradually changing. A recent survey, by the National Association of Secondary School Principals, shows that 20 per cent of high school students now study economics and that nearly 75 per cent of all teachers in the social science field have had two or more courses in economics at the college level.

One of the most significant developments has been the discovery that the subject of economics must be started in the primary grades and that its basic principles can be presented in a way that makes good sense to young children. The Joint Council on Economic Education, founded in 1949 and supported by all segments of the economy, has formulated a plan called the Developmental Economic Education Program which Dr. Jones believes is one of "the most important elements in the development of economic education in recent years."

Its purpose is: 1. To develop and test new teaching materials. 2. To improve teacher preparation in economics. 3. To build an understanding of economic principles into school curricula.

This fall 30 public school systems with an enrollment of 3 million students will be taking part in this program.

New approaches are being explored. For example, in the fourth grade students come to understand that the price of a good or service is its money value in the market. As Dr. Jones puts it: "They also understand that we do not always use the word price. We may use the words fee, rent, wage, salary, and interest."

Economics deserves a vast upgrading in the scale of academic importance. It requires understanding of words and their meanings and an approach based on disciplined thinking rather than emotions. The study of economics does not involve indoctrinating a person to either the liberal or conservative point of view. It should provide the tools for analyzing and judging the workings of the economy and the effect of government action upon those workings.

In Dr. Jones' view, "...economy literacy is enormously important for the future health of the national economy and for the strength and influence of the United States in the rapidly changing world economy."

A Painful Necessity

Because the President's commission on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy allegedly based some of its findings on conjecture and accepted an apparently erroneous autopsy report, the commission's findings continue to be under attack.

Two new books, "Whitewash" by Harold Weisberg and "Inquest" by Edward Jay Epstein, both claim evidence indicates that Lee Harvey Oswald had an accomplice. Because Oswald was slain before he could be questioned, rumors and charges will no doubt continue to grow.

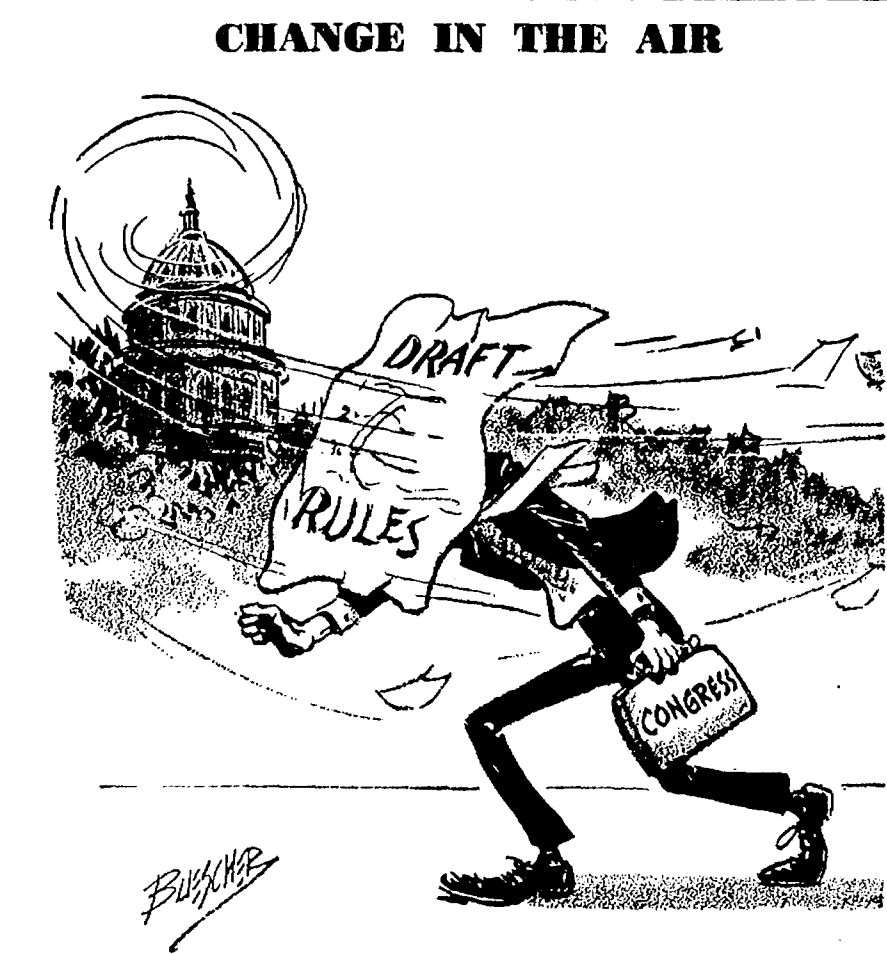

The commission reported that the same bullet which first struck President Kennedy also wounded Gov. John Connally. The authors contend this was impossible because of an FBI report that the bullet was lodged in the President's body.

If the report is true they say another assassin had to have fired one of the shots because it was physically impossible for a sniper to fire two rounds in the split second during which both the President and the governor were struck.

The writers also assert that the average commissioner heard only about 45 per cent of the testimony and that the report was written entirely by staff members.

Painful as it would be, is reopening of the assassination investigation in order? Charges such as those put forth by the authors cannot go unanswered in a tragedy of such magnitude. The mere fact that the commission gave skeptics a single loophole on which to base books is unfortunate for the nation.

Doubts about the veracity of the report can lead to dangerous rumors. The public has a right to expect flawless performances from these men of high stature. If they did so perform their job proof should be offered immediately.

Inside Washington

By HENRY CATHCART

WASHINGTON — Has success spoiled the National Aeronautics and Space administration? More and more people in Washington are beginning to think it has.

This does not mean that there is anything like general unhappiness at NASA's exploratory progress in space. On the contrary, there is every belief that the agency is conducting a superb scientific program.

Washington's concern lies in the agency's handling of money, not rockets. To the administration and to the responsible committees in Congress, NASA appropriations have been sacrosanct. There has been little or no serious attempt to ration the agency's appropriations in the way that most other governmental entities are handled.

Usually, NASA's requests for funds have been granted with little real questioning of whether any specific expenditure of funds is necessary. In turn, NASA's virtually unending successes in budgetary launchings has encouraged officials of the agency to ask for money for everything. If any governmental agency operates on the principle that "money is no object", it is NASA.

Recently, the General Accounting Office issued a report charging that poor planning by NASA had cost the taxpayers at least $2.5 million more for its Moon probe than would have been necessary. It is apparent in many other areas that NASA has been substituting the luxury of spending for the discipline of planning.

It would indeed be tragic if NASA should so wear out its welcome before congressional appropriations committees that some day it should be denied funds for necessary projects.

Letters To The Editor

The Herald-Press:

RELIABILITY

The average personnel director, employment counselor, business executive or employer has but one particular thing in mind when he inquires whether or not the applicant possesses a high school diploma. His first thought is reliability.

The diploma offers the prospective employer two bits of evidence.

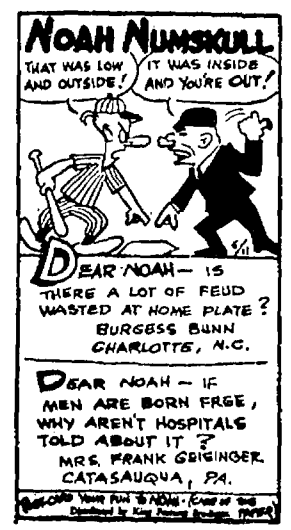

First, it gives testimony of matriculation and completion of the course of study required to the full and complete satisfaction of the faculty; and second, certified, written proof of the courage of the graduate to complete the job started at enrollment.

This second issue is perhaps of far greater importance than the diploma. It suggests reliability and this alone opens up the gates of trust and confidence into which the new worker can follow an already lighted path. Once on that road the new worker will soon learn that success or failure is his own reward. Time will tell as to whether or not he has earned his diploma.

Reliability is the most prized asset of any individual. In work or at play, at home or in society, the reliability of the individual is tested every day of the year and frequently many times in one day. Unless we meet the challenge head on and win, we're a dead goose so to speak.

The present nationwide demand for high school graduates is not so much matter of education as it is a demand for some proof of reliability. Investors expect it. Industry, finance and commerce require it. It is the one big asset of the human animal.

SCHIZOPHRENIA, one of the more severe mental disorders, has resisted many types of treatment. Psychiatrists have tried their form of therapy with disappointing results.

Research scientists have been studying the possibility that schizophrenia may be the result of some chemical imbalance in the body. This has been the target for a study that now seems to be promising and hopeful.

Dr. Abram Hoffer, in Saskatchewan, Canada, has been using a new and simple drug and has been able to relieve some of the severe symptoms of this psychotic disorder. He reports that in many of the cases "the response to this experimental drug was prompt and dramatic."

The drug is known as NAD, which is short for the impossible sounding chemical name nicotinic acid adenine dinucleotide.

The early and preliminary tests of the drug on schizophrenic patients have been able to relieve and control some of the more severe symptoms that previously were untouched by other methods of treatment.

The study was based on the fact that nicotinic acid, previously used, seemed to be effective in some cases. The new drug has been tried on many so-called hopeless cases. Although complete cure and control was not obtained there was distinct benefit.

The drug works in a rather complicated way by changing the metabolism of epinephrine, a hormone product in the blood. What is most exciting about this research is the fact that it supports the theory that schizophrenia is a "chemical imbalance." Undoubtedly, this early study will point the way to newer and more extensive ones that ultimately will prevent the onset of this mental disturbance.

READERS RELATED QUESTIONS

Is there any clear-cut definition of schizophrenia?

Unfortunately, no. The term technically means "splitting of the mind." There are probably as many definitions as there are people who try to define it.

For all practical purposes it is classed as a mental disorder in which there is marked personality change, associated with delusions and lack of reality.

People untrained in the exact meaning of this psychotic disorder sometimes use the word schizophrenic to describe anyone whose behavior does not conform to their own. This does both persons a great injustice. The term should only be used as a medical and psychological one.

HOT RACES FOR ST. JOSEPH SCHOOL BOARD

Best Possible Route, Says I&M

Discuss Power Line Dispute With S.J. Twp. Board

Officials of Indiana & Michigan Electric Co. told St. Joseph township board members Thursday night that the route mapped for its new sub-transmission power line in the township affects the least possible number of private property parcels.

Any other of the possible alternative routes for the 69,000-volt line would effect considerably more property and home owners, the power company spokesman said.

The informal conference Thursday night was the result of an agreement made during a court hearing on the township's move for an injunction against the line. Company Counsel Joseph Kilian said then that I&M officials would meet with the board to review details of the project and answer questions.

The line enters St. Joseph township at Maiden Lane just east of the Continental Can plant and follows the C&O railroad property to a point north of the Hickory creek ravine west of Cleveland avenue. From there it goes due east to the Hickory Creek substation located between Niles, Washington and Lincoln avenues.

TOUR BY INSPECTOR
Don Andrew, I&M system superintendent for real estate and right of way, and John Steffoff, Benton Harbor division superintendent, told the board the route plans were given to the township last December and the township building inspector had been taken for a tour of the entire route in the same month. The route and line plans also were filed with the Michigan Public Service commission and received its approval.

Steffoff said it is imperative that more electricity be brought into the Hickory Creek substation before next fall and winter to serve the surrounding area.

The company spokesmen said the line is already completed or under construction from the Pokagon station in Cass county all the way to the St. Joseph township line.

EASEMENTS SECURED
In Hillview Manor subdivision on Washington avenue, where seven property owners have filed a suit to stop the line, Steffoff and Andrew said the easements for the route were all secured before all but two of the homes in the new subdivision were started. The line, they said, will not be a completely new thing, since the bigger line will follow the path of an existing 7,200 volt line across that area.

As concessions to the private property owners, I&M officials said the firm would eliminate cross arms and attach the insulators directly to the poles to reduce the bulk of the structures; it will put the existing 7,200 volt line underground and run the service lines underground into all Hillview Manor homes that abut on the line. They agreed, too, to provide landscaping on the easement area wherever it crosses the rear of a private lot.

Carl L. Conklin is surrounded by railroad tracks at his home at 1520 Forbes avenue, St. Joseph, and he's happiest when the rail traffic is heaviest.

Conklin built a replica of an old wood burning locomotive, powered it with a 2½-horsepower engine and built 228 feet of track that encircles his home for the weekly visits of his only grandson, two-year-old Lance Drake Conklin.

There is enough room in the engine cab to stuff five little engineers and firemen. There is no shortage of candidates.

Conklin has geared the clutch system so he can start the motor and the engine runs by itself — fast enough to give the kids a thrill but slow enough so they won't be bounced out.

HOW HE DID IT

Conklin cut down a 30-gallon drum for the boiler, fashioned the funnel-type stack out of sheet metal, placed a spotlight on the front and made the wheels and the rest of the engine on his home workshop equipment.

The engine is 52 inches high and 6½ feet long. It weighs about 275 pounds.

He got the idea from a hobby magazine but modified it from electric to gasoline power.

Next Conklin plans to build a tender and one coach.

LAYING TRACK

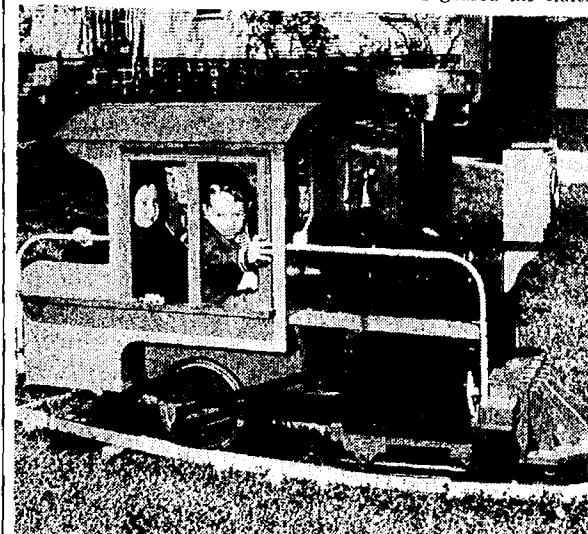

Laying the track posed a problem, especially at the curves. The wood was soaked and then bent to fit. A little soap on the insides of the track helped too.

Conklin's grandson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Craig Conklin. They are presently students at Western Michigan University. Usually they are in St. Joseph on weekends.

Maternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Howard Drake, 845 Wisconsin, St. Joseph.

Conklin has long been a model railroad fan. His college age son had a complete model railway when he was a youngster. Conklin has also built numerous models of locomotives.

He has operated the Wilbur Ice Cream shop on Broad street in St. Joseph for the past 16 years. He also is a member of the St. Joseph fire department.

FULL LOAD: With boiler and funnel stack in place, the engine departs on a trip over the 228 feet of track that encircles the Conklin home. At the throttle (window at right) is Lance Drake Conklin, an engineer at age of two. (Staff photos)

Need Help To Staff Centers

The call is out for volunteers to help staff the two children's centers that will be operated this summer by the Twin Cities Area Human Relations Council.

High school, college students and adults are invited to training sessions from 7 to 10 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at Calvin Britain school.

Children's centers will be held at Calvin Britain and Hull schools. They will feature cultural and recreational activities in arts, crafts, dramatics and music for children in the first through sixth grades.

The centers should not be confused with Project Head Start conducted by the Benton Harbor school district. Head Start is for children who will start kindergarten next fall.

'HEAD START' Your Child Can Still Be Enrolled

There are still openings in Project Head Start, the war on poverty summer kindergarten for culturally disadvantaged children who will be starting school this coming fall, Leonard Cassidy, local project director has announced.

Cassidy said that parents may make application for their children at Seely McCord elementary school, 465 South McCord street, Benton Harbor, all of next week.

The actual beginning of classes is expected to be June 27 at eight schools, Bard, Boynton, Calvin Britain, Hull, Morton, McCord, Sterne Brunson and Stump.

The program will last for eight weeks with classes held Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 12 noon, according to Cassidy. Children who will be five years old on or before Dec. 1 will be starting to kindergarten next fall and thus eligible for Head Start. Children from low-income families are given priority, Cassidy said.

Here Is Field Of Candidates

Voters Will Pick Three In Election Monday

St. Joseph school district voters will elect three men to the board of education Monday. Significantly the board of education, while the votes are being counted will begin deliberation on a Citizens Advisory Council recommendation that ninth graders be shifted into St. Joseph senior high school and the senior high school expanded. Winners will take office July 1.

There will be at least two new board members. Robert Bloomberg, a trustee appointed two years ago, declined to run again and Donald W. Weiland, veteran board member, resigned after purchasing a home out of the district. Ray M. Dumke is the only incumbent among the seven candidates seeking the three open positions on the board.

The candidates for the two four-year terms are Dumke, James E. Challenger, Harold J. Eljas and James C. Mason. The two candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be elected.

Weiland's term has two years to run. Seeking to fill the unexpired portion of the term are Douglas C. Burr, Arthur Franzen and Louis Schroeder. The candidate with the highest number of votes will be elected.

POLLING PLACES

Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. There are four polling places in school elections. The polling places and the areas covered are as follows:

First precinct, Band room, junior high school, St. Joseph; precinct includes area north of Lake Court, Winchester and Wolcott in St. Joseph.

Second precinct, Room 104, St. Joseph High school, entrance northeast corner, on Lakeview avenue; precinct extends south of Lake Court, Winchester and Wolcott and north of Hilltop road and St. Joseph drive.

Third precinct, North Lincoln school gymnasium, Lincoln avenue, St. Joseph; precinct includes territory east of Washington avenue and south of St. Joseph drive.

Fourth precinct, Gard school principal's office, Hilltop road near Cleveland avenue; precinct covers area west of Washington avenue and south of Hilltop road and St. Joseph drive.

Biography of candidates and their platforms are as follows:

CHALLENGER

James E. Challenger, 1107 Highland avenue, St. Joseph; president of Bastian Morley Co. and Kritzer Radiant Coils, Inc., both of LaPorte, Ind.

Challenger served as a Republican precinct captain when he resided in Glenview, Ill.

The Challengers have four sons and a daughter. They are John 11, Jim 9, Mark 7, Tom 5 and Ann 4. All but the youngest are enrolled in St. Joseph Public schools.

Challenger, an attorney, was a candidate for the seat held by Board President Collins Gillespie last spring. A circuit court judge ruled Challenger's name could not appear on the regular ballot because he did not own property in the district at the time the petition was filed. Challenger subsequently obtained property and ran on stickers and polled 717 votes to Gillespie's 859.

Mrs. Challenger this spring accused the St. Joseph board of education of appointing a "rubber stamp" citizens committee, pointing out her husband had not been appointed despite his strong showing at the polls last year.

Challenger was called to Chicago this week on business and reported he was unable to compose a formal statement.

DUMKE

Ray M. Dumke, 900 Greenwood, St. Joseph, accountant, with Dumke and Associates was appointed to the board of education in September 1964 a little over a month after voters approved a special operating levy after turning it down twice before. Dumke was chairman of the special citizens committee that studied school operations, recommended a reduced operating millage proposal and actively campaigned for its passage.

He is immediate past president of Independent Accountants association of Michigan and past president of the St. Joseph Lions club. Dumke is a former varsity football player at Indiana university and was Treated For Slashing

A Berrien township farm worker, Dolly Slater, 33, was treated for superficial cuts of the face and chest and released from Berrien county hospital early today after she was slashed by an unknown man on Maple road in the township, she told Berrien sheriff's deputies.

She told Deputy Ned Knuth she broke away from the man and ran back to her place of residence, the Kegley farm on Maple lane, to be taken to the hospital. Deputies were notified shortly before 2 a.m. today.

Suddenly, He Is A Believer

Globe-Shaped UFO Seen In Benton

An unidentified flying "globe-shaped" object, traveling eastward about 40 feet above Meadowbrook road in Benton township, was reported by Elmer Banks, a township resident, early today.

Banks told Sgt. Jack Drach that he was headed for home and had just turned off Pipestone road to head east on Meadowbrook road when the road became illuminated.

Banks, assistant manager at McDonald's hamburger stand, 1681 M-139 South, Benton township, said he stopped his car and saw the object, about 35 to 40 feet in diameter, going overhead. It made a sound like "a laboring jet engine," Banks told Drach.

FOLLOWS IT

Banks said he followed the object, which he reported was ringed in blue lights, on Meadowbrook to M-140, stopping at his home on Meadowbrook at Blue Creek road to call the police. He no longer could see the object when he got to M-140, he said.

Drach quoted Banks as saying he didn't use to believe in UFO's, but that this experience "made a believer" out of him.

The police officers said they had received no corroborative reports on the object.

WHOOOPS

His Name Isn't Linda

Steven Elliot Zaban says he's been taking a ribbing and wants it known that his name is not "Linda Louise." The girl's name inadvertently appeared in front of Zaban in the list of Benton Harbor high school graduates printed in this newspaper Wednesday. Steve, who received his diploma Thursday, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Zaban, 233 Bradford drive, Fairplain.

Around Town

LAWRENCE FISHER III

TEN-YEAR-OLD Lawrence R. Fisher III is getting a liberal education through travel, but he's paying for it, too.

He returned recently from a 3½-week trip to Ireland and England... with a real nose-plugging, voice-croaking cold. It's not new for the boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence R. Fisher Jr., of Linco road, Stevensville, and Chicago.

Two years ago the boy got straight A's in his spelling assignments and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence R. Fisher Sr., rewarded him with a trip to Florida. Tough luck; it was cold in "sunny" Florida. Undismayed, the lad's grandparents took him to Puerto Rico.

He promptly came down with the mumps.

The Fisher Srs. again escorted Lawrence on his latest trip. "We were just a d d i n g about," he said. "I saw my old home in Hampstead, England." Larry lived there three years while his father studied with Lloyds of London. He has also visited Spain, Norway, Sweden, France and Mexico.

CLAYTON NIMMO
Against Saigon Skyline

THIS week has been a memorable one for a Benton Harbor mother of two sons serving in Viet Nam with the U. S. Air Force.

Mrs. Edna Fay Nimmo, 679 Territorial road, reported:

Her son, Airman 2/c Clayton E. Nimmo, 21, called her from Viet Nam through the use of short wave radio to California and telephone from California to Benton Harbor.

Airman Nimmo during the conversation said that for the first time since arriving in Viet Nam last September, he had met his brother, Airman 1/c Joseph M. Scruggs, 34. The two met Monday in Saigon. Airman Scruggs has been in Viet Nam since January.

Mrs. Nimmo said Clayton is a radio operator and instructed her in his call to say "over" each time she passed the conversation to him. He enlisted in the Air Force for four years.
